Martin Luther King, Jr. once said:

There are some things in our nation and in our world to which I'm proud to be maladjusted... I never intend to adjust myself to segregation and discrimination. I never intend to become adjusted to religious bigotry. I never intend to adjust myself to economic conditions that will take thousands from the money to give hundreds to the few, and leave millions of people parading on a lonely island of poverty in the midst of a vast ocean of prosperity. I never intend to adjust myself to the machine of militarism, and to the self-defeating effects of physical violence...

And I will agree you to be maladjusted to these things until the good society is realized...

Yes, I must realize that I believe firmly that our world is in
